Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase
Durham County, North Carolina

Section 7: Description

The Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase contains approximately forty-five block faces of houses built largely between ca. 1900 and ca. 1960. The adjacent Trinity Historic District (NR 1984) includes the south half of the Trinity Park neighborhood and the smaller Trinity Heights subdivision located north of Duke University's east campus. The roughly five-block wide boundary increase consists of the northern section of the Trinity Park neighborhood. The increase area extends from Green Street, the north boundary of the Trinity Historic District, north four blocks to West Club Boulevard. It is bounded on the west by North Buchanan Boulevard and on the east by Woodland Drive. At the northeast corner, the boundary extends one block east of Duke Street to include the 1500 block of Woodland Drive. The blocks included are the 800-1000 blocks of North Buchanan Boulevard, west side; 800-1100 blocks of North Buchanan Boulevard, east side; the houses outside the original Trinity Historic District in the 900-1000 blocks of Green Street; the 800-1000 blocks of West Club Boulevard, south side; the 900-1000 blocks of Demerius Street; the 1200-1400 blocks of Dollar Avenue; the 1300 - 1400 blocks of North Duke Street, west side; the 1400 - 1500 blocks of North Duke Street, east side; the 900 - 1100 blocks of Englewood Avenue; the 1100-1400 blocks of North Gregson Street; the 900 - 1000 blocks of West Knox Street; the 1300-1400 blocks of Norton Street; the 1200-1400 blocks of Watts Street, and the 1500 block of Woodland Drive. Distinctly different neighborhoods justify the logical boundaries of the increase area. On the north end, West Club Boulevard, a major thoroughfare, fronts a large shopping center, Northgate Mall, and other commercial establishments. On the west is the neighborhood of Walltown, developed in the 1910s and 1920s with small rental houses, many of which are duplexes.<sup>1</sup> To the east stands the neighborhood of Duke Park, which developed from the 1920s into the post-World War II period.

The topography of the boundary increase area features moderately hilly terrain. North Duke and North Gregson streets traverse across undulating hills. The cross streets are more level and ascend gradually toward the west. On many streets, houses on the high side have retaining walls with steps that ascend to the front yards, while on the low side the houses are built on basements that become daylight basements in the rear.

There are a total of 325 principal buildings in the district, all of which are houses except for the Watts Street Grocery, 1201 Watts Street, and three ca. 1950 churches: Grace Lutheran Church, 822 North Buchanan Boulevard, the former Hellenic Orthodox Community Church, 1316 Watts Street, and the former Church of Christ, 1323 Watts Street. All but fifty-five of these buildings predate 1955, thus 79% contribute to the district's historic and architectural character. Ninety-seven contributing garages and sheds stand in the district. Fifty-five principal buildings, sixty-three outbuildings, and two structures are noncontributing. Twenty lots in the district are vacant.

Block faces feature closely spaced houses with small front yards along streets that continue the grid of the Trinity Historic District. North Duke Street on the east is a major northbound thoroughfare through central Durham to Interstate 85; North Gregson Street one block to the west is a major southbound thoroughfare that carries traffic to the Durham Freeway (Highway 147). The north-south Watts Street and North Buchanan Boulevard are two-way streets that carry heavy traffic. Two other north-south streets, Dollar Avenue and Norton Street, carry light traffic because they do not extend through the district. The east-west streets of Green, Demerius, West Knox, and Englewood bisect the increase area. Recently, traffic circles were added at the intersections of Dollar Avenue with Englewood and West Knox streets, and speed bumps were added on Green Street to calm traffic in the interior of the expansion area.

The street appearance, landscaping, and general architectural appearance of the boundary increase area are very similar to the Trinity Historic District. Houses are set close to the street on fifty-to-sixty foot wide lots, with granite curbstones outlining the streets. A canopy of tall pin oak trees lines nearly every block in the boundary increase area. These were apparently planted in the 1930s as a WPA project that lined other central Durham neighborhoods with trees as well. In the northern section of the boundary increase area stand a few large Ranch houses that occupy double and sometimes triple lots, but the majority of the houses in the boundary increase area are middle-class single-family houses occupying a single lot.

Although a variety of house styles and types compose the streetscapes of the boundary increase area, they create a harmonious whole because of their consistency of height (one, one and one half, or two stories), consistently small street setback, the unifying effect of the canopy of mature hardwood trees, and the continuity of design features, including brick and frame wall materials and front porches. Because the thoroughfares bounding the area were constructed earlier than the interior cross streets, the oldest houses line these thoroughfares. The southernmost block between Green and Demerius streets also contains older houses. Six basic house types or styles, built from ca. 1900 to ca. 1955, populate the blocks of the Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase area: Queen Anne, bungalow, Colonial Revival, Tudor Cottage, Minimal Traditional, and Ranch. Many houses retain original garages at the end of their side driveways.

The first construction in the increase area, which was farmland in the early twentieth century, were a small number of predominantly frame Queen Anne-style, pyramidal cottage, and vernacular tri-gable houses. Some of these were farmhouses; others were harbingers of suburban growth along the major thoroughfares. In the early twentieth century the Davis family built a large two-story Queen Anne-style house at 915 West Club Boulevard. Just east at 911 stands the Cole-Couch House, another stylish Queen-Anne style house built about 1915. Nearby, the D. Samuel Miller House, at 1417 Watts Street, is a one and one-half-story Queen Anne cottage built about 1915. Miller ran a grocery store on West Club Boulevard near his house. At 1319 Watts Street stands a two-story Queen Anne-style house built for farmer Stephen F. Gates about 1913 as his town house. A few vernacular tri-gable houses (a one-story, side-gable house with a front decorative gable) and pyramidal cottages (a one-story house with a pyramidal hip roof) are scattered through the district. The well-preserved tri-gable house at 1026 Green Street, built about 1910, was occupied by house painter Ira Satterwhite in the 1930s. Moses O. Cole, owner of the Durham Granite Company, built a granite pyramidal cottage at 922 Demerius Street in 1912. It stood alone on its Demerius Street block until the late 1930s. A trio of frame pyramidal cottages show up on the 1913 Sanborn map at 909, 911, and 913 North Buchanan Boulevard.

From the late 1910s to the early 1930s approximately forty-five bungalow/Craftsman-style houses were constructed in the Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase. The bungalow's popularity peaked in the mid-1920s, when approximately two dozen frame and brick bungalows were built along the major north-south streets, as well as the cross streets of Green, Demerius, and Englewood. The most distinguished examples are large brick bungalows. The J. Otis Kimrey House, 807 West Club Boulevard, is a wide, side-gabled house with a gabled front porch and gabled dormers, covered with wood shingles, and wide bracketed eaves. The Samuel M. Ruben House, 1517 North Duke Street, is a front-gabled house with Flemish-bond patterned walls and a porch with heavy brick piers and a brick balustrade. A well-preserved frame bungalow at 1301 Watts Street may have been built for himself by builder and architect A. Ernest Wilkerson, who worked for Muirhead Construction Company. The front-gabled house has a full engaged porch with granite coping on the brick porch posts. Another distinctive frame bungalow is the hipped roof house with a full engaged porch, wide eaves, and a daylight basement built for William L. Brown, founder of Brown Plumbing Company, at 1104 North Gregson Street. Bungalows continued to be built into the early 1930s, but these feature a wider, lower silhouette and are generally called Craftsman-style houses rather than bungalows. An example of the late phase of the style is the T. Alvin Wheeler House at 919 Englewood Avenue, a side-gabled house with an attached gabled entrance porch.

From the late 1920s to about 1945 the most popular house type built in the area was the Tudor Cottage, a one and one-half-story house with a steep gabled roof, brick walls, and an entrance with such Tudor details as an arched doorway trimmed with stone. The style appeared prior to the Depression in such houses as the Massey House, 1202 North Gregson Street, an unusually large Tudor Cottage with an engaged corner porch with classical columns. Another pre-Depression Tudor Cottage is the sizeable frame house with a brick terrace and a shed porch built for Samuel Rasberry, a superintendent at Golden Belt Manufacturing Company, at 1320 North Gregson Street in the late 1920s.

The Tudor Cottage reached its height of popularity in the mid-to-late 1930s as Durham was recovering from the Depression. Some of the finest were designed by local architects with prominent Tudor characteristics such as steep front gables with arched entrances encased in stone and textural brick walls. In the 1000 block of West Knox Street stand a group of richly detailed brick and stone Tudor Cottages designed by Durham architect George F. Hackney. In 1936 Hackney designed the Herman Burchett House, 1008 West Knox Street. About the same time he built a Tudor Cottage for himself at 1012 West Knox Street. The Tudor Cottages at 1006, 1010, 1009, and 1014 West Knox Street are of similar design and date and may be Hackney designs. Number 1009, a two-story Tudor Revival style house, is one of the largest examples of the style in the expansion area. A fine example of the style is the William E. Stanley House, 1108 North Gregson Street, built in 1940 from a design by architect Robert R. Markley. The house has an arched stone entrance surround and a front corner sunroom that may be original. A number of more modest Tudor Cottages, built throughout the 1940s, stand along North Buchanan, North Duke, North Gregson, Watts, Englewood, West Knox, and Norton streets. These feature shallower gabled roofs and simpler entrances. Some of the small 1930s and 1940s houses in the boundary increase are called Period Cottages because they feature an eclectic mixture of Tudor and Colonial Revival features. For example, 1404 North Duke Street and 920 North Buchanan Boulevard have generally Tudor form, with gabled front wings, but Colonial Revival entrance surrounds.

For larger houses, the Colonial Revival style was popular in the expansion area from the late 1920s to the early 1950s. An early distinguished Colonial Revival-style house is the Benjamin Gaddy House, 1411 North Gregson Street, built about 1930 for Gaddy, a superintendent at the Golden Belt Manufacturing Company. The two-story buff brick house has a pedimented entrance porch, flanking one-story wings, and wide eaves with paired wooden brackets. About 1935 builder John T. Sally built a two-story brick house for himself at 912 W. Knox Street. Clerk of Superior Court Wilbert Young had a Colonial Revival-style house built in 1940 at 1110 North Gregson Street. At 1206 North Gregson Street stands the Roy Levy House, another stately house built about 1940. A significant group of two-story brick Colonial Revival-style houses was built in the late 1930s and early 1940s in the center of the increase area. Raymond Weeks, of the prominent local architectural firm of Atwood and Weeks, built an elegant two-story brick Georgian Revival style house for himself about 1940 at 1108 West Knox Street. Similar houses stand at 1105 and 1107 West Knox Street, 1307 and 1311 Dollar Avenue, and 1101 and 1102 Englewood Avenue, built for several tobacconists, a physician, and other affluent clients. Atwood and Weeks designed many elegant Colonial Revival style houses for wealthy clients on large lots in Durham and Chapel Hill's finer neighborhoods, and may have designed these Trinity Park houses.

By the early 1950s, Colonial Revival-style houses favored either the Mount Vernon-type portico or the Colonial Williamsburg Revival style. Building contractor Edwin L. Bullock's frame two-story Colonial Revival style house built at 1511 North Duke Street about 1950 has a full-height portico, and its side hyphen and wing extend across the side lot. Architect Archie Davis designed a dramatically large Colonial Williamsburg Revival-style house at 1410 North Gregson Street about 1950 for Don Wright. The main block is flanked by smaller wings connected by hyphens that create an elongated shape that stretches across three lots.

When construction resumed in the increase area after World War II about 1945, most of the houses built were a simplified form of the previously dominant Tudor Cottage style, with a lower side-gable roof, a lower front gable wing, and more "Colonial" than "Tudor" detailing. Known as the Minimal Traditional style, about thirty of these houses were built in the increase area from the 1940s to about 1960. The ca. 1950 row at 900, 902, 904 and 906 Demerius Street are Minimal Traditional-style one-story frame or brick houses with small entrance porches, several with front picture windows. These may possibly have been financed by Veterans Housing Agency loans provided to veterans after World War II.

In 1950 the first Ranch houses appeared in the increase area. Local architect William Van Eaton Sprinkle designed a contemporary Ranch house for W. L. Brown Jr. at 913 West Knox Street in 1950. The wide side-gabled brick house features a front flagstone wing with recessed carport, a recessed entrance with extensive brick planters, bands of metal casement windows, and concrete slab floors with radiant heating. Similar Ranch houses at 914 West Knox Street and 1308 North Gregson Street may have also been designed by Sprinkle.

Number 914 West Knox Street, built about 1952 for Michael Vassiliades, has similar wide eaves that shelter entrance porches at front and rear, brick planters, and an integral carport. Six other Ranch houses were built during the period of significance to 1955. The largest Ranch house is the Wade Penny House, 1005 West Club Boulevard, built about 1955.

Fifty-six noncontributing primary buildings, consisting of houses, two churches, and one store, stand in the historic district boundary increase. These include six Minimal Traditional-style houses built in the late 1950s, seventeen Ranch houses built in the late 1950s and 1960s; a handful of custom contemporary houses, four duplexes (located on North Buchanan Boulevard), three post-1955 quadruplexes and one early twentieth century house that was remodeled into a quadruplex, and small infill houses of recent decades. Grace Lutheran Church, 822 North Buchanan Boulevard, and the Hellenic Orthodox Community Church, 1316 Watts Street, both built about 1950, have lost their architectural integrity due to enlargement and remodeling. Four of the noncontributing buildings are pre-1955 houses that have had significant alterations. These buildings are scattered evenly throughout the boundary increase, and do not have a negative visual impact on the overall cohesive architectural character of the area. The largest group of noncontributing buildings, the post-1955 Ranch houses, are largely indistinguishable from the pre-1955 Ranch houses. Most of these are small brick Ranch houses, such as 1019 and 1025 Green Street built about 1960. The most strikingly contemporary Ranch house in the expansion area is the sprawling brick house at 1414 North Gregson Street built by contractor Thomas M. Hunt for himself about 1960. The low Roman brick walls extend out into front and rear wings, and feature a front band of floor length windows.

Inventory List

Note: List is arranged alphabetically, by street name, north side first, then south side; west side first, then east side. Buildings are of frame construction unless otherwise stated. Dates are derived from the following primary and secondary sources. The primary sources are the 1913 and 1937 Sanborn maps [1913, 1937 SM]; Durham City Directories dating from 1910 to 1955; and interviews. The major secondary source is The Durham Architectural and Historic Inventory by Claudia P. Roberts and Diane E. Lea, 1982. (Durham A & H Inventory) With the exception of a few buildings that appear on the 1913 Sanborn map, the 1937 Sanborn map is the first one that includes the increase area.

All buildings are categorized as C (contributing) or NC (noncontributing) based on the following criteria. A contributing building was built during the period of significance and retains its architectural integrity. Any building built after the end of the period of significance, in 1955, is noncontributing due to its age (NC-age). The 1953 Durham City Directory does not exist and could not be used to determine construction dates.

Buildings built before 1955 that have lost their architectural integrity because of substantial additions and/or alterations incompatible with their historic character are categorized as noncontributing because of these changes (NC-alt.). Examples of this are complete window, door, and porch replacements; artificial siding that obscures the original door, window, wall and eave detailing, and extensive post-1955 additions. Artificial siding such as aluminum, vinyl or asbestos shingles does not automatically render a building noncontributing if it retains its historic form and other early features such as windows and a porch.

CONTINUATION SHEET

Section 7 Page 6

Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase

The system by which construction dates and names of owners/occupants are assigned to the houses is as follows. The house is dated based on its first appearance in the street listings section of the city directories. Only the following directories were consulted: 1920, 1925, 1930, 1935, 1940, 1945, 1950, 1952, and 1955 city directories. If the street address of a house does not appear in the 1925 directory, but does appear in the 1930 directory, then its construction date is given as ca. 1930. Pre-1940 directories do not distinguish between owners and renters, thus it is impossible to determine whether the pre-1940 occupant was the owner. If the same occupant is listed as owner in the following five-year interval directory, then he/she is assumed to have been the owner in the previous period as well. Houses in which the occupant can not be determined to have been the owner are simply named "House." There are exceptions to this system. The directories do not list blocks until a certain residential density had been achieved, therefore a number of blocks in the northern section of the district are not included in the directories until the 1930s. If the architectural appearance of a house indicates that it is older than its first city directory listing, an estimated date is given. For example, bungalows that first appear in the 1930 directory in blocks that were not mapped in 1925 are dated "ca. 1925" because they are likely closer to 1925 than to 1930. Some of the names and construction dates are based on interviews with knowledgeable local residents.

1900                          Davis-May House. Queen Anne-style 2-story house with a pyramidal-hipped roof and a 2-story gabled front wing. The house retains its original weatherboard, 6/6 sash windows, boxed eaves, central chimney, and a one-story wraparound porch with slender Tuscan columns and a plain railing. The gable ends have decorative Queen Anne windows and carved sunburst ornaments. Above the entrance is a recessed balcony with sawn spandrels and a plain railing. The classical entrance surround with fluted pilasters and the front picture window with small panes date from a Colonial Revival-style remodeling around 1940. A one-story flat-roofed bedroom wing was added to the rear in the 1950s.

George L. and Evelyn Murray Davis built the house in 1900 on a large lot that extended to Englewood Avenue on the rear. In 1918 D. C. May, noted Durham decorator, purchased it, and his daughter still resides here. The Mays converted the upstairs to a separate apartment by closing off the main staircase and adding an exterior stair. About 1940 the Mays remodeled the main floor, substituting Colonial Revival-style mantels and raised paneling for the original Queen Anne finish.

Section 8: Statement of Significance

The Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase, an approximately twenty-block area extending from the Trinity Historic District [NR 1984] north to West Club Boulevard, expands the boundaries of the Trinity Historic District to include the north half of the historic Trinity Park neighborhood. The original historic district includes the streets from Morgan Street north to Urban Avenue that were platted in 1901 and developed during the first two decades of the twentieth century. The boundary increase contains the area to the north platted and developed after 1917. The 269 primary contributing buildings consist almost entirely of houses constructed during the period of historic significance from ca. 1900 to ca. 1955. The boundary increase area was subdivided and its housing constructed largely during the 1920s to the 1940s, as the city of Durham's booming tobacco industry, Duke University, textile mills, and the general economy expanded. From the scattered Queen Anne-style houses constructed during the early twentieth century, to the bungalows built in the 1920s as the streets and lots were subdivided, to the Tudor Cottages and Colonial Revival-style houses built in the later 1920s and again in the later 1930s as the economy recovered from the Depression, the boundary increase area took shape as a pleasant continuation of the gridded blocks lined with willow oak trees and small and medium-sized houses with small front yards. Beginning in the 1930s a significant number of duplexes were constructed in the increase area. Following World War II the remaining lots were infilled with small Minimal Traditional style houses and, beginning in 1950, a small group of Ranch houses. Some of Durham's most prominent architects and builders lived in houses of their own design in the Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase, including Robert R. Markley, 1401 North Gregson Street, a Colonial Revival-style house; George Hackney, 1012 West Knox Street, a 1936 Tudor Cottage; John Sally, 912 West Knox Street, a 1935 Colonial Revival-style house; and Raymond Weeks of Atwood and Weeks, 1108 West Knox Street, a 1940s Georgian Revival-style house.

The Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase meets National Register Criterion A for its community planning and development significance to the city of Durham. The district is also eligible under Criterion C for its local architectural significance. The historic context for the district's community development significance may be found in "Historic Resources of Durham, (Partial Inventory: Historic Architectural Properties)," specifically in Section 8, chapter B-1, "City of the New South: Public Services and Real Estate Development," pages 8.22-24, and "The Development of Modern Durham: the 1920s and 1930s," pages 8.33-34. The historic architectural context for the district and property type discussion appears in section 7, chapter C, "Durham's Architecture," under the headings Popular Housing, circa 1880 to the 1910s (7.9-11); Residential Neoclassicism, 1900-1920 (7.13-14); The Period Revival Styles, 1910s-1940 (7.15-17), and Picturesque Revival Styles: Houses (7.18-20). Additional context for the period 1940-1955 is provided in this nomination.

Historical Background:

By the early 1900s, the city of Durham, established in the 1850s, had expanded into a bustling industrial tobacco and textile town that sprawled on both sides of the North Carolina Railroad running southeast to northwest through town. Gridded blocks of new houses were appearing along Duke and Gregson streets and cross-streets north of the new Trinity College campus (now Duke University's east campus), established in 1891-92. The original subdivision of Trinity Park was created in 1901 when Brodie L. Duke, brother of Trinity College founder James B. Duke, subdivided his land east of Trinity College when plans were announced to build a Durham trolley system. The name "Trinity Park" originally referred to the campus of Trinity College. The subdivision was named "Trinity Park" in the 1970s when the neighborhood association was formed and needed to distinguish the neighborhood from surrounding neighborhoods. Up to that time it was simply known as the neighborhood adjacent to Trinity College (later Duke University).<sup>2</sup> The 1901 plat shows a grid of streets extending from Morgan Street north to Urban Avenue.<sup>3</sup> The 1913 Sanborn map shows that the southern section of the new suburb had many houses, and by 1940 the Trinity Historic District was largely filled with houses.

The area of Trinity Park north of Urban Avenue was not developed by Brodie Duke, who died in 1917. By 1912 a trolley line ran north-south along Broad Street, four blocks west of Trinity Park, to E Street, a forty-five-foot wide street laid out in the early twentieth century, and ran west to the Durham waterworks at the west end of town. It was renamed Club Boulevard about 1912 when George Watts built a country club in the 2500 block near Hillandale Road. (Durham's trolley system closed down in the early 1930s.) The section of Club Boulevard east of Broad Street became the north boundary of the Trinity Park neighborhood. By 1913 Watts Street and North Buchanan Boulevard had also been laid out. Isolated houses were scattered about the area at this time. The 1913 Sanborn Map shows only the southern two blocks of the Trinity Historic District and the 800-900 blocks of Watts Street and North Buchanan Boulevard. Among the handful of houses on the map in the boundary increase area are a row of three pyramidal cottages at 909, 911 and 913 North Buchanan Boulevard. The Davis-May House was built by George L. and Evelyn Murray Davis in 1900 on a large lot at 915 West Club Boulevard that extended to Englewood Avenue on the rear. The Cole-Couch House, a large frame Queen Anne style house, was built next door at 911 West Club Boulevard for the Cole family in the early 1900s. Another early house is the 1912 Cole-Blomquist House at 922 Demerius Street. The pyramidal cottage with granite walls was built by Moses O. Cole, owner of the Durham Granite Company, and stood alone on its block until the late 1930s.

Between Urban Avenue and West Club Boulevard were scattered farmhouses and farm fields that were subdivided in the 1920s and 1930s by individual landowners, who continued the grid street pattern of Trinity Park through their property and laid out lots of similar size to those platted by Duke. The C. L. Markham Farm occupied much of the land north of Urban Avenue. Markham's house stood in the path of West Markham Avenue (one block south of Green Street) between Watts Street and North Buchanan Boulevard when Markham Avenue was cut about 1920.<sup>4</sup> This area was subdivided into Markham Avenue and Green Street, the north end of the Trinity Historic District. Fields around the Boone farmhouse, 923 Englewood Avenue, were subdivided in the 1920s, and by 1937 seven houses stood in this block of Englewood Avenue.<sup>5</sup> Miss Demerius Dollar owned land north of the Markham Farm, and Demerius Street and Dollar Avenue were created when her land was subdivided in the 1930s. Heirs of the C. L. Markham and Demerius Dollar estates platted the block between Watts, Demerius, Dollar and Knox streets into lots in 1934.<sup>6</sup> In 1934 the Markham subdivision in the block bounded by Gregson, Green, Watts and Demerius streets was recorded.<sup>7</sup> In 1934 the section of Watts, Demerius, Dollar and W. Knox streets was subdivided.<sup>8</sup> Heirs of the D. A. Malone Estate subdivided their property in 1930 and again in 1936 to create Norton Street between Knox and Englewood streets.<sup>9</sup> Land around the Stephen Gates House, 1319 Watts Street, was sold in 1936 and subdivided.<sup>10</sup> The large Queen Anne-style house, built about 1913, is well-preserved on its present residential lot, surrounded by houses built from the 1930s to the end of the twentieth century.

The 1937 Sanborn map indicates that all of the present streets had been established, but only North Duke Street and Club Boulevard had been paved. The east-west streets, originally designated by letters, had largely received their present names by this time. A Street became Green Street; B became Demerius Street; C became West Knox Street; D became Englewood Avenue; and E became West Club Boulevard. Large areas of the blocks were not yet subdivided. Since growth was moving east from Trinity College, by 1937 the westernmost blocks between Watts and North Buchanan streets were approximately halfway built up, and clusters of houses stood along the south side of Club Boulevard and North Duke Street. Smaller clusters stood along Demerius, Knox, and Englewood streets. A total of ninety-eight houses stood in the boundary increase area in 1937. The basic infrastructure of the boundary increase area, including the majestic willow oaks that now form a leafy cathedral along most of the streets and the handsome granite curbstones had probably been put into place by the city of Durham.<sup>11</sup>

Development of housing in the northern half of Trinity Park continued during the Depression, in part due to the continued prosperity of Durham's tobacco industry.<sup>12</sup> A majority of the lots in the area were subdivided in the first half of the 1930s, and housing appeared on the lots as the economy recovered in the late 1930s. The peak of construction in the area was from the late 1930s to 1941. The area attracted a number of architects and builders who built their own homes and custom houses for clients. Contractor and architect A. Ernest Wilkerson lived in a 1920s bungalow that he may have built for himself at 1301 Watts Street. Architect Robert R. Markley lived throughout most of his career, from about 1930 to about 1960, in a Colonial Revival-style house at 1401 North Gregson Street. Prolific contractor John L. Sally purchased a lot at 912 West Knox Street in 1933 from the Malone family and built a rather plain two-story brick Colonial-Revival style house for his family about 1935.<sup>13</sup>

Sally had lived in the southern section of Trinity Park since 1914, and constructed a number of houses in the Trinity Historic District and the Watts-Hillandale Historic District in Durham, including Craftsman, Tudor Revival, Dutch Colonial, Foursquare, and bungalow style houses.<sup>14</sup> Architect George F. Hackney built himself a brick Tudor Cottage at 1012 West Knox Street about 1936, and designed another brick Tudor Cottage at 1008 West Knox Street for Herman Burchett in 1936. Hackney is not listed as an architect in Durham's 1930 city directory, but does appear as an architect in the 1940 city directory. The other houses in the distinguished group of brick Tudor Cottages and two-story Tudor Revival-style houses along Demerius and West Knox streets may be his designs as well. Architect Raymond Weeks, of the firm Atwood and Weeks, built an elegant Georgian Revival style house for himself at 1108 West Knox Street about 1940. The work of Atwood and Weeks included many Georgian Revival-style houses in the 1920s and 1930s for upper and middle management at American Tobacco Company in Durham, as well as the distinguished Memorial Auditorium, Raleigh, in 1933, and the Colonial Revival-style Chapel Hill Town Hall in 1938.<sup>15</sup> A significant group of large Colonial Revival-style brick houses along West Knox, Dollar, and Englewood streets built in the late 1930s and early 1940s may be the work of the firm.

Residents in the boundary increase area included middle and upper middle class merchants, academics, and professionals as well as blue collar workers. The large lots in the 900-1000 blocks of Demerius and West Knox streets, and the 1300 block of Dollar Avenue, laid out in the mid-1930s, attracted the wealthiest residents in the district. These residents built substantial Tudor Revival and Colonial Revival-style houses, largely of brick, in the 1930s and 1940s, a number of which were probably designed by architects. Some of the residents were affiliated with Duke University, although fewer than in the southern half of Trinity Park, since by the 1930s the university had shifted much of its activity to its new west campus. Three Duke University professionals owned large distinguished Tudor Revival-style houses built in the mid-1930s on Demerius Street. Dr. Forrest McCrea, a doctor at Duke Hospital, lived at 1021 Demerius Street; professor Earl Hamilton at 1015 Demerius Street; and professor Frederick Wilson at 1020 Demerius Street. Orren Dowd, who taught at Central Junior High School, owned an impressive Tudor Revival-style houses at 1018 Demerius Street. Not all the residents affiliated with Duke University lived in custom-designed new houses. Long-time Duke University botanist Hugo Blomquist lived in Moses Cole's 1912 stone house at 922 Demerius Street for many years in the twentieth century.

A number of the residents worked in Durham's tobacco industry. American Tobacco Company foremen Elmore Hackney and Samuel Algranti lived in Tudor Revival-style houses on West Knox Street. Norwood Thomas, a buyer for Imperial Tobacco Company, lived in a large Colonial Revival-style house at 1101 West Knox Street. Benjamin Gaddy, a superintendent at Golden Belt Manufacturing Company, owned a distinguished Colonial Revival-style house built about 1930 at 1411 North Gregson Street. Liggett & Myers mechanic Charles Faucette owned a large Colonial Revival-style house at 1307 Dollar Avenue built about 1940. Tobacconist Ballard Troy owned a house of similar style and date at 1311 Dollar Avenue. Tobacconist A. Graham Roycroft owned a Tudor Cottage, built ca. 1940, at 914 Englewood Avenue. Liggett & Myers foreman David Rogers owned a late example of the Tudor Cottage, built about 1950, at 910 Englewood Avenue.

Other professionals, including doctors, lawyers, bankers, clergymen, accountants, insurance agents, and realtors also owned some of the large, stylish houses in the expansion area. In the 900 block of Englewood Avenue lived chiropractor and landowner Samuel D. Coleman and bankers R. Bailey Reade and W. Jethro Broadwell. Lawyer Ludlow Rogers lived in a mid-1930s Tudor Cottage at 1012 Demerius Street; dentist Rothschild Holden in a house of similar design and date next door at 1014 Demerius Street. William E. Stanley, superintendent of Durham County's welfare agency, lived in a 1940 Tudor Cottage at 1108 North Gregson Street. Next door, at 1110 North Gregson Street, lived Wilbert Young, Clerk of Superior Court, in a large brick Colonial Revival-style house built in 1940. Realtor Joseph Wilkerson lived in a large Georgian Revival-style house at 1407 North Gregson built about 1945. Physician Joseph Holloway lived in a substantial Colonial Revival-style house built about 1945 at 1102 Englewood Avenue. Insurance agent Wilfred Noblin lived in a Minimal Traditional-style house built about 1950 at 904 Demerius Street. St. Phillips Episcopal Church apparently built the large Colonial Revival-style house at 1102 North Gregson Street as a rectory about 1952.

Merchants who owned grocery, clothing, furniture and other types of stores were sprinkled throughout the boundary increase area. D. Samuel Miller, who operated a grocery store on West Club Boulevard, lived in a picturesque Queen Anne cottage built about 1915 at 1417 Watts Street. Druggist A. Paul Carswell lived in a large Colonial Revival-style house built in the mid-1930s at 1101 Englewood Avenue. Roy Levy of Levy Brothers Clothing lived in a large Colonial Revival-style house at 1206 North Gregson Street built about 1940. Albert Weeks, owner of Weeks Motors, lived in a ca. 1940 Tudor Cottage at 1317 North Gregson Street. Philip Tager, of Tager Brothers Mens Clothing, lived in a Minimal Traditional-style house built about 1952 at 1516 North Duke Street.

Service workers, such as policemen, firemen, bus drivers, gas station attendants, and others lived in the Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase area in bungalows, small Tudor Cottages, and Minimal Traditional-style houses. Bus driver Ira McBroom lived in a Tudor Cottage at 923 North Buchanan Boulevard built about 1935. Fireman Bruce Lowry lived in a ca. 1940 Minimal Traditional-style house at 1505 North Duke Street. Postal worker Clarence Williams lived in a Minimal Traditional-style house built in 1950 at 905 Demerius Street.

No construction occurred during World War II from 1942 to 1945, since neither materials nor labor was available. After the war builders continued to build on the remaining lots in the north end of the area. Taste shifted to a more modest version of historic revival design, the Minimal Traditional style. About 1952 builder Aubrey Michael owned a one-story brick Minimal Traditional-style house with casement windows and a gabled entrance porch at 1510 North Duke Street. He may have built this for himself. Across the street at 1511 North Duke Street, builder Edwin Bullock owned a two-story Colonial Revival-style house built about 1950, probably for himself. Themelis Zervos, owner of Ideal Diner, owned a Minimal Traditional-style house at 902 Demerius Street built in the early 1950s.

Although the majority of houses in the boundary increase area were built as owner-occupied dwellings, a number of the smaller houses along the main north-south thoroughfares were probably built as rental dwellings. Several small bungalows and frame hipped-roof houses built in the 1920s in the 900 block of North Buchanan Boulevard, west side, were probably rental units. Similar bungalows from the 1920s to 1930s along North Duke Street and Minimal Traditional-style houses from the 1940s-1950s on North Duke and Watts Street were probably also built as rentals. Because of its location close to the east campus of Duke University and its convenience to downtown Durham, the expansion area of the Trinity Park neighborhood, like the older district, had a large number of multi-family dwellings. While the original district is distinguished by its group of large apartment buildings, the expansion area has a small number of duplexes, both one and two-story types, built from the 1930s to the 1950s. The earliest duplexes are a group of three 1935 two-story, frame duplexes, with simple classical front porches, located at 1106-1112 Green Street and 902-904 North Buchanan Boulevard. The east side of the 1000 and 1100 blocks of North Buchanan Boulevard are nearly solid block faces of one-story duplexes built soon after World War II. These modest Minimal Traditional-style duplexes have two front doors, often concealed within a recessed entrance, that gives them the appearance of a single family dwelling.

About 1950 the Ranch house appeared in the district. Some of these early Ranch houses have contemporary details inspired by the Usonian houses of Frank Lloyd Wright. Architect William Van Eaton Sprinkle designed the contemporary-style Ranch house at 913 West Knox Street in 1950 for W. L. Brown Jr., co-owner of Brown Brothers Plumbing Company. This is said to be the one of the first architect-designed Ranch houses in Durham.<sup>16</sup> Sprinkle, a native of Mocksville, North Carolina, studied architecture at Yale University and moved to Durham about 1940. After service in World War II he returned to Durham and practiced architecture until his death in 1965. His own residence, built ca. 1940 at 2909 Hope Valley Road, outside the district, is a small Modernist-style dwelling.<sup>17</sup> Sprinkle probably also designed other nearby Ranch houses of similar design in the Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase area, including the house at 916 West Knox Street for Greek-American restaurateur Michael Vassiliades, and the house at 919 West Knox Street. Sprinkle's Ranch houses feature such Usonian features as low hipped roofs with overhanging eaves, large central chimneys, bands of casement windows, decorative stone trim, and recessed carports and porches. Wade Penny, owner of Penny Furniture Company, built a large Ranch house at 1005 West Club Boulevard in the mid-1950s. The architect, Charles Knott, was a partner of George Hackney. One of the largest houses in the district is the contemporary-style Ranch house at 1414 North Gregson Street built about 1960 by Thomas M. Hunt, owner of Hunt Construction Company and Hunt Linoleum and Tile Company, for himself. The brick house features bands of floor-length windows and front and rear wings.

By the early 1970s, the stability of Trinity Park as a neighborhood of predominantly single-family dwellings was being affected by the conversion of many of the larger houses to student housing for Duke University. In 1974 neighbors formed the Trinity Park Association to preserve the architectural character and historic atmosphere. Although a distinct neighborhood from its surrounding neighborhoods, it had never had a name. The association named it "Trinity Park" in order to give the area a unique identity. In 1976 the association succeeded in downzoning Trinity Park to stem conversion to high-density rental property. Since then, the association has promoted pride and cooperation among the residents by providing a forum for neighborhood activities and a liason with local government.<sup>18</sup>

The Ranch house designed for Eugene's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Brown, on Englewood Avenue in the Duke Park neighborhood in 1948 by William Van Eaton Sprinkle may be the earliest architect-designed Ranch house in Durham. Original plans of the two Brown Ranch houses exist in the collection of Doris Stanley, 2909 Hope Valley Road. Stanley was a draftsman for Sprinkle from 1950 to 1965.

Additional Community Planning and Development and Architecture Context

Amid the explosive growth of neighborhoods around central Durham in the first half of the twentieth century, the Trinity Park neighborhood, which doubled in size from its original 1901 subdivision when its northern reaches were platted in the 1920s and 1930s, is the largest suburban development of the era in Durham. While the new subdivisions of Forest Hills and Hope Valley laid out in the 1920s featured picturesque naturalistically-planned streets laid out around parks or country clubs, the Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase area maintained the grid-patterned plan of the earlier subdivision. The overall framework for the significance of the Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase is found in Claudia Roberts Brown's Durham multiple property documentation form, "Historic Resources of Durham," 1984. The historic contexts: City of the New South: Public Services and Real Estate Development: 8.22-24, and "The Development of Modern Durham: the 1920s and 1930s" 8.33-34, illuminate the community planning and development significance of the Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase.

The advent of a trolley system in 1902 resulted in the platting of the first suburbs in Durham. One of the earliest, the area now known as Trinity Park, located on the east side of the campus of Duke University (now the East Campus), was subdivided in 1901 by Brodie L. Duke when the new Durham trolley system plan was announced. Another early suburban neighborhood is Morehead Hill, which developed southwest of the town center in the 1890s. In 1910 attorney, banker, and philanthropist John Sprunt Hill built his opulent Spanish Colonial Revival style house at 900 S. Duke Street, now one of only two mansions left standing in Durham. By the early 1910s, this enclave of high-ranking Duke tobacco company executives was the most fashionable neighborhood in Durham (Morehead Hill Historic District, NR 1985). A suburb that evolved in direct response to the trolley was Lakewood Park, laid out in 1902 by Richard Wright, owner of the trolley line known as the Durham Traction Company (Lakewood Park Historic District, NR 2003). The construction of Watts Hospital in 1908-1910 in a rural area northwest of the town center precipitated the development of the Watts-Hillandale neighborhood (Watts-Hillandale Historic District, NR 2000). Forest Hills, created in the early 1920s, is the first Durham suburb of naturalistic plan. Located southeast of Lakewood Park, Forest Hills featured picturesque winding streets, a golf course, pool, and clubhouse. In the late 1920s, Durham's first truly rural country club suburb, Hope Valley, was established on rolling acreage southwest of Lakewood. Hope Valley's curving streets and large lots were laid out around an eighteen-hole golf course. The final important early twentieth century Durham suburb is Duke Forest, developed by Duke University in the late 1920s to provide house lots for its professors.

Architecturally, the houses of the Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase are closest in character to those of the nearby Watts-Hillandale Historic District. Both districts are characterized by bungalows and Colonial and Tudor Revival-style houses. Although the Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase was not Durham's most exclusive subdivision of the era, middle and upper-middle class houses of architectural distinction arose on its lots. The "Historic Resources of Durham" contains two architectural contexts that illuminate the architectural significance of the district: The Period Revival Styles, 1910s-1940 (pp. 7.15-7.17) and Picturesque Revival Styles: Houses (pp. 7.18-7.20). The 1920s and 1930s were the era of the popular bungalow in Durham. Using plans ordered by mail or selected from contractors' guidebooks, contractors built bungalows in all sizes and all stylistic variations. Those built by the relatively affluent homeowners in the Watts-Hillandale and Trinity Park neighborhoods tend to be larger and more carefully finished than bungalows built in working class neighborhoods such as East Durham and Old West Durham.

An important trend in Durham housing of the 1920s and 1930s is the "period house" containing elements of historical revival styles without being strictly imitative. Examples are gambrel-roofed houses that evoke the Dutch Colonial Revival-style, Tudor-influenced cottages, and houses featuring classical features evocative of Georgian and Federal architecture. In the 1920s period houses began to be built throughout the newer Durham suburbs, including College View, Watts-Hillandale, North Durham, Duke Park, and Trinity Park. The same Durham architects, including Robert R. Markley, George Hackney, Atwood and Weeks, and Archie Royal Davis, who designed custom Tudor and Colonial Revival-style houses in the Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase area, were working in Durham's other suburban neighborhoods.

At the end of World War II, during the first ten years of post-war expansion in Durham, the unbuilt lots of Trinity Park and other early subdivisions were developed with the two most popular house types of the era—the Minimal Traditional and the Ranch house. The scattered examples of these post-war house types represent the final chapter in the historic development of the Trinity Historic District Boundary Increase. The Minimal Traditional house, the dominant house form of the post-war 1940s and the early 1950s, was a simplified form of the previously dominant Tudor and Colonial Revival styles of the 1920s and 1930s. These one-story houses have low pitched roofs and inexpensive decorative accents such as classical trim around the front entrance. By the early 1950s the Ranch style replaced the Minimal Traditional style, and remained dominant through the 1960s.<sup>19</sup> Ranch houses are low, wide one-story houses, generally of brick construction, that often feature attached garages. The earliest Ranch houses often acknowledged the influence of Frank Lloyd Wright's Prairie House style by such Modernist details as bands of large windows, wide cantilevered roof planes, and integral terraces with walls and planter boxes.

Verbal Boundary Description:

The nominated boundaries are shown on the accompanying base map, prepared by the Durham City/County Planning Department, at a scale of 1 inch = 200 feet.

Boundary Justification

District boundaries have been drawn to include the area containing the densest concentration of pre-1955 properties. To the south is the Trinity Historic District (NR 1984). On the north the major thoroughfare of West Club Boulevard separates the district from commercial development. On the west is the early twentieth century neighborhood of Walltown, and on the east is the neighborhood of Duke Park, developed from the 1920s into the late twentieth century.
